

What is Dementia?

Whilst the likelihood of developing dementia increases with age, dementia is not a normal or inevitable part of ageing. Dementia is also not a disease in itself; it's a term used to describe a group of symptoms that may accompany a number of diseases or conditions that affect the brain. Dementia affects everyone differently. It can cause a wide range of symptoms, including difficulties with memory, problem-solving, communication and language. People may also become confused or struggle with how they perceive things. Dementia can cause changes in mood or emotions and may affect how someone behaves.

Supporting those living with dementia is a priority for Biddulph Town Council, therefore, we've put together this guide that's jam-packed with useful contact information, where you can get advice on everything from staying safe to financial support.

STAYING SAFE

The Herbert Protocol

Do you know what the Herbert Protocol is? Do you care for someone who has dementia and worry that they might go missing? The Herbert Protocol is a national scheme where you fill out a form in advance to give to the police if your loved one goes missing – it saves time, and the police can start a search sooner. You can give a copy to friends, family and neighbours. Keeping a form means you don't have to try and remember the information when you're under stress. When you call the police, say you have a Herbert Protocol profile available. Forms are available on the following websites:
